

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. It appearing to the satisfaction of the Court that "The Human Rights The Emancipator" and other incendiary papers published in the Northern states, have been forwarded to the Post office in this place addressed to free persons of Colour— And the Court believing that a free circulation of papers of this character, is well calculated to produce a spirit of disobedience and dissatisfaction among the free negroes and slaves injurious to the good order of that class of Persons in the Southern states—Therefore Resolved that the Mayor¹ call on the Postmaster at this place, and request that he will, as far as he is authorized, withhold the delivery of such or similar papers addressed to free negroes and other coloured persons.

MY MOTHER.

MYSELF.

THIRD EVENING.

[See Vol. I, p. 109.]

I was born in Norfolk on the 20th of June A. D. 1750. My first recollection is of the death of my little brother Cornelius, who must have died when I was four years old, and I remember as well as if was yesterday, how I cried on the occasion. "O, hush my dear little Miss Nellie," said the nurse Rachel to me "and don't cry so, or you will make your self sick and die, and then Master and Mistress will have more trouble" Still, I cried and cried, and that very night according to my nurses word, I was taken with a nervous fever which was nigh carrying me off, but, at the end of forty days, I recollect, they put split pigeons to my feet (to draw the fever down, it was said,) and I grew better—and after a while, got well. When I grew a little older, I was put to school to a poor old dame by the name of Mrs Drudge, and, to be sure, she did drudge to teach me my letters—spelling and reading after a fashion. Poor old woman, she thought me a nonsuch, and I thought her the greatest woman in the world. She taught me, good soul, to read the Bible and the stories in it pleased me greatly. I remember particularly, the story of good old Isaac and his sons—“And it came to pass when Isaac was old &c.,” I could once say it all by heart. After I had learned out here, I was sent to a Mrs Johnson—a very large fat woman, who died one day in her fat, and perhaps, of it—for she was a monstrous woman, indeed. She taught me needle-work, and marking on the sampler. After this as I was shooting up, my father, who thought me a very fine smart girl (for, I was always his favorite,) wished to send me to a fashionable boarding school that there was then in Williamsburg, but my mother would not consent, saying, she could not part with me, for, she loved me dearly, too. Shortly afterwards, Donald Campbell, imported a school master from Scotland, by the name of Buchan, who opened a select school, and I was sent to him to learn the higher branches of English, French or Spanish or any outlandish language, for in that day it was thought that one tongue was enough for a girl. Here, perhaps, I might have learned something, but I was in my teens, and too fond of talking and doing nothing to get my lessons, and my teacher used to humour me and spoil me. So, my education was very imperfect, and I have always regretted that my opportunities for learning were so poor—though I must confess that I might have improved them better than I did. At the same time, my good mother taught me some useful things out of school. She was always for setting me to read the Bible, which I always loved better than any other book. She took me, too, to church along with her every Sunday, and I got some good, I suppose, from the sermons I heard, though, I cannot say that I remember any of them, particularly except one. This was a sermon which I had the happiness to hear from the great Mr Whitefield,¹ when I was about twelve or thirteen years old. He preached in Portsmouth and stood out, I remember, on the steps of a house not far from the Ferry wharf, for such crowds of people had come in from all quarters to hear him, that no house could hold them all. And there he held his white handkerchief in his hand and talked away with a loud sweet voice, that I shall never cease to be hearing. His text was from the 3rd chap. of John, "Ye must be born again." "Poor Nicodemus" methinks I see him now—a ruler of the Jews—and yet he did not know that he must be born again. At another time he broke out, "Alas, I tell you I might as well think to stop yon vessel under sail, by waving this handkerchief at her (waving while he spoke) as for any one of you to think of getting to heaven without being born again." All the people were moved. For my part, I thought I never heard anything like him before, and no doubt, he did me more good than I knew at the time—for I have felt his words, or rather the words of our blessed Saviour himself, in my heart from that time to this. As I grew on my mother taught me something of the mysteries of housewifery—in which she was very expert—how to make pies, puddings, jellies and all sorts of niceties, in which, I was an apt scholar—for I loved to learn such things and you know, could eat as well as make them. I enjoyed, too, the conversation of all the company who used to come to my father's house, and which was the best the town afforded—tales of war—tales of the sea—and the gossiping stories of the day, which I could tell again with a lively relish. I was indeed a gay lively girl, fond of talking and laughing—but always in an innocent, good humoured way—for I never liked to give anybody pain, but always tried and generally contrived to please every one. My father was very hospitable and used to entertain all the strangers of any note that came among us, and especially the Captains and officers of the British Navy that used to visit our waters before the war. Among these, I remember particularly Capt Gell,¹ a fine old man, afterwards Admiral Gell. He commanded at this time, a fifty gun ship, called the Lanneston, with one of the officers of which, as you will see in the sequel, I was determined to unite my fortune for life. He had thirty-two midshipmen on board, mostly boys and lads of good families and several of them sprigs of nobility. These used to come to my father's house at all hours, and frequently dined with us. Sometimes, too, they would go into the kitchen to get a little something to stay their appetites; when old Quashabee would assert her authority, and threaten to pin a dish—something, to their young lordships, if they did not get out of her way. Nay, she would now and then carry her threat into execution and actually fasten one of these badges of a cook's wrath upon one or other of them, to the great diversion of all the rest of these boys and lads. I remember particularly a young stripling by the name of Lord George Gordon,¹ afterwards so famous as the leader of the riots in London, whom I have seen begging old Quashabee for a piece of the skin which she had just taken off the ham which she was about to send into the house for dinner, and eating it with great relish. Of course I had many beaux who flattered me and danced with me, and one or two, who loved me and would have married me if I would have said yes. Among these last there was a young Mr Smith, a Lieutenant in the British Navy, with a fine florid face and auburn hair, who came here in a merchant vessel, on his way to join his ship in the West Indies, who would have given his eyes for me if I would have taken them. At least he warmly urged me to say that I would wait for him, for he was then very young—hardly more than eighteen or nineteen—saying that he had great connexions, who would soon have him promoted—when he would come and claim my hand. He said, too, that if I would not have him, he would live single for my sake. This, indeed, though I thought it very pretty, I did not quite believe at the time—though it turned out to be true enough. Still, however, I did not fancy Mr Smith well enough to engage myself to him, and though he wrote to me from

In the name of God amen I John K Read, Senior, do make and ordain this as my last Will and Testament—Imprimis I do hereby authorize and empower my Executors herein after named or the Survivor or Survivors of them, to make Sale of my lowest Warehouse, now in the possession of M'Candlish & C^o, for the best price which can be obtained therefor, on six months credit, for negociable notes payable at Bank, and I request and direct them to apply the proceeds thereof to the payment of my Debts — in aid of this fund and for the same purpose of paying all my just Debts I do farther authorize and request my Executors to make Sale of my Chariot and horses on the same terms. Item It is my wish that my Shop and the business thereof should continue to be carried on by Doct Mortimer during the term agreed on by the articles of Copartnership between us, and according to the various stipulations of that contract of Copartnership and my part of the profit arising from the continuance of the business to be assets in the hands of my Executors for the payment of my debts—But if on my death it should not be the choice of Doctor Mortimer to continue the business of the Shop, then it is my will and desire that the Medicines and furniture of the Shop be sold by my Executors immediately on the same terms as I sold one half of them to Doct Mortimer: and if those terms cannot be had, on the best that can be procured by them and the monies arising from the Sale of my Shop to be in like manner assets in the hands of my Executors for the payment of my debts, and moreover if it should be the choice of Doctor Mortimer to continue the business of the Shop according to the stipulations of the contract of Copartnery between us untill the end of the term prescribed by that contract then, at the expiration of the term, it is finding out from my conversation who I was, said to me, "Pray ma'am will you allow me to ask, were you not formerly Mrs Maxwell, the wife of Capt James Maxwell of Norfolk." "Yes Sir," said I, "I was" "Then ma'am," said he, I have to tell you that on leaving England some time ago, to come to this my Will and desire that the medicines and furniture of the Shop which may be on hand, be in like manner sold by my Executors, and the proceeds of such Sale to remain in their hands assets for the payment of my debts: if any debts shall then remain unpaid, then subject to the future direction of this my last Will, or, in case I shall not deem it necessary to give any special direction on this hand, subject to distribution according to the Laws of this State. Item I will and direct that my Executors shall proceed to collect all my outstanding debts, without delay, and the monies so by them collected to be also assets in their hands for the payment of my Debts. Item I will and desire that it may be understood that the funds which I have before designated for the payment of my Debts, are those which I prefer as being first liable for my Debts; and I desire that no part of my Estate, real or personal, may be resorted to for the payment of my Debts, until those which I have already designated should be exhausted. Item it is my Will and desire that my second warehouse now in the occupation of the Tuckers, shall be rented annually, or otherwise, in the discretion of my Executors or the Survivor or Survivors of them, for the best terms that can be procured, during the natural life of my wife, and that the rents thereof be equally divided between my three children John K Read, Benjamin Franklin Read and Lucy F Jones, and on the death of my wife I leave the said warehouse, together with all the rights, privileges and profits thereunto belonging, unto my son Benjamin Franklin Read and his heirs forever, subject however to an annual payment of twenty five pounds to my daughter Lucy F Jones during her natural Life. Item I give to my beloved wife during her natural life, my uppermost warehouse, at present in the occupation of Mr Knox: remainder to my son John K Read and his Heirs forever subject to an annual payment of twenty five pounds to my daughter Lucy F Jones during her natural Life to commence from the period of my wives death. Item I give to my beloved wife during her natural Life the negroe boy Billy; remainder to my son Benjamin Franklin Read and his heirs forever, and if at any time during her life my wife should find it more convenient to sell the negroe boy Billy, I desire that she may do so provided she replaces him with another of equal value: which other, in that event, I give in like manner to my son Benjamin Franklin Read and his Heirs forever after the death of wife—Item I give to my Grandson Walter F Jones and his Heirs forever all my right, title and Interest in and to a purchase made by Luke Wheeler, Commodore Truxton, and others of Benjamin Stoddard of lands in the City of Washington. I give to my son John K Read and his heirs for-country, I was particularly desired by an old friend of yours, Admiral Smith (for the young Lieutenant was now no less) to present his best regards to you, if I saw you and to tell you that he had kept his word, and was still a batchelor for your sake" There was romance for you. And, you will say, per-ever, my negroe woman Lucetta and her four children. Item it is my will and desire that my Executors in the course of one year after my death shall out of my Estate purchase of Henry Banks the Girl Kitty and her child: and which Girl with her child, and future offspring, I give to my Daughter Lucy F Jones during her natural life, and after her death, to my Grandson Walter F Jones and his Heirs forever, and in case the said Henry Banks shall refuse to part with the said Girl Kitty and her Child, or in case my daughter Lucy F Jones should prefer any other woman Slave of price not exceeding one hundred pounds, then I will and desire that my Executors instead of the said Girl Kitty and her Child shall purchase such other so preferred by my daughter, which other Slave with her offspring I give to my daughter Lucy during her natural life, remainder to my Grandson Walter F Jones and his Heirs forever. Item It is my Will and desire that my plate and household furniture of every description be equally divided between my beloved wife and my son John K Read leaving it to my wife to choose the time most convenient for her to make that division Item I give to my beloved wife and her heirs forever my Cart and mule Item It is my will and desire that my Executors hereinafter named be exonerated from giving Security for performing the duties of their office Finally I do hereby constitute and appoint my beloved wife Executrix and my sons John K Read and Benjamin Franklin Read and my friend Capt W^m Cammack Executors of this my last Will and Testament and revoking all other former Wills or Memoranda of Wills heretofore made by me, I do In Testimony thereof, setting hand and Seal to this my last Will and Testament, contained in a sheet and a half of letter paper erased and interlined in sundry places and finally executed by me this twenty seventh day of January in the year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and five

At a Hustings Court held the 23^d day of April 1805 The last Will and Testament of John K Read Senior deceased was proved by the haps, that I ought to rewarded such a swain. But the truth is, at the time when he paid me his address, I was rather partial to another young man—named B—— M——, who loved me dearly and wished to marry me, but my father and mother, who saw further into him than I did, would neither of them consent for me to have him. At this juncture, Capt Gell arrived here oath of William Maxwell one of the witnesses thereto, and on the motion of Helen Read Executrix therein named who made oath thereto and entered into Bond in the penalty of twenty Thousand Dollars with such condition as the Law requires Certificate is granted her for obtaining probat thereof in due form reserving to the Executors named in the said Will the right of qualifying at a future Court if they choose. And at a Hustings Court held the 27th day of May in the year aforesaid The said last Will and Testament was proved by the oath of William Wirt another witness thereto and ordered to be Recorded in the frigate Launceston, with a number of fine young officers under his command, and among the rest, Mr. Maxwell, who was the sailing master of the ship, a smart active man, a good seaman, and a great favorite with the captain and all who knew him. They all came often to our house, but Mr. M. oftener than any, and I soon suspected, and, indeed, saw plainly now, that he was after me. He was not handsome, at least not like Smith or B—— M——, but he was a good looking man, sensible, agreeable, and full of chat. Indeed, he had so much to say about his voyages and travels—his adventures on the coast of Norway, at the siege of Quebec, General Wolfe and all the rest, that, he soon won my fathers heart and even made some impression on mine. At least, if I did not listen to his tales with as much interest as Desdemona did to those of Othello, I certainly was easily persuaded to admit that he would make a very agreeable companion for one. At length, my father said to me one day, “Well, Nelly, I suppose your friend B—— still wants you, but he is indolent and good for nothing, and I cannot favor his suit, Still, I do not say that you shall not have him, On the contrary, I say you may take him if you choose, and I will give you five hundred pounds for your portion, but that is all you must expect me to do for you. For, as you make your bed, you know, you must lie in it. But, here now, is Mr Maxwell, an honest sensible and industrious man, who your mother and I both think will make you an excellent husband, if you can fancy him, and if you will take him, I will give you 1000 to begin with, (for he is worth, at least, two of the other) and, I will, moreover, continue to do what I can for you both afterwards, for I am sure, it will not be money thrown away. Reflect upon what I say, and decide for yourself. I reflected accordingly, and soon made up my mind to take Mr Maxwell with my parents favor, rather than poor B—— without, and all being arranged for it, we were married in 1767. I was not quite 17 years old at the time, and Mr. Maxwell was about 32, nearly twice my age, but at the same time he was so hearty and lively, that there was no real disparity between us. Indeed, I soon found that he was all I ought to wish in a husband. “The guide of my youth,” the father of my children, and the friend of my heart till death. I may add here, that from my own experience in the case, I cannot help thinking that if young girls would follow their parents advice instead of their own foolish fancies, in the choice of their partners for life, it would often, if not always, be much better for them. After our wedding, we went to a number of parties that were made for us by the officers, and the town people, for we were both favorites with all. At one of these, which was a dance, I saw my old beau, who came up to me, when I was sitting by myself for a moment, and said to me with a deep sigh, which I am sure he drew from the bottom of his heart: "And, so, you are married and to a stranger, too. What a risk you have run, though I must do him the justice to say that every body speaks well of him, and I sincerely hope, for your sake, that he will make you a good husband." "No doubt he will," said I,—“but for you B——, what do you intend to do with yourself now” “Oh, as to that,” said he, “I shall neither hang nor drown myself, but to be even with you, shall marry some pretty girl or other, as soon as I can, that I think, will be the best way to spite you” “The best in the world” said I “and I am really glad to hear you make so sensible a speech. Get you a wife, as soon as you can, and whoever she may be, I promise you, I shall sincerely wish you much joy with her.” Just then, I was called up to take another dance, and giving my hand to the young officer who took me out, I left my quondam friend to himself. He married not long afterwards a young lady in the country, and though we met no more in the road of life, I have always remembered his fond attachment to me with pleasure and can not help suspecting that I love his daughter, who afterwards married my nephew, a little better for her fathers sake.

SWISS SETTLERS.

We have for several Weeks past, been in Expectation of the Arrival of a Ship, with about 500 Protestant Switzers, who were coming to settle on the Southern Boundaries of this Colony, and who sail'd from England about the Beginning of August. By Vessels that have arriv'd here, we have had several Accounts of their being seen and spoken to, at Sea; and by one lately, who gave an Account, that they had lost the Captain, Mate, and 50 or 60 Passengers, most of them children, who dy'd; and that the rest were in great Distress for want of Provisions, occasion'd by the Tediousness of their Voiage. From these circumstances of the poor People, who had sold their All, and left their Native Country, to come and settle in This, they were much pitied, by many here, on Account of their Miseries. At last, we have an Account of their Arrival; with the following melancholly Circumstances, which we gather from Two Letters sent hither from Princess Anne County, and Hampton, and from some current Reports: That the said Ship arriv'd within the Capes of Chesapeak-Bay, on Wednesday the 3d Instant, and came to Anchor in Lymhaven-Bay; that the Wind blew very hard that Afternoon and Night, at North West, which tis suppos'd drove her from her Anchor, and she was the next Morning discover'd stranded on the Shore in the said Bay, with Water in her to her Upper Decks; and a great Number of the People, who were almost famish'd with Hunger, had the Misfortune to lose their Lives. These Letters do not particularly mention, in what Manner they lost their Lives, whether by attempting to get ashore, when the Ship stranded; or whether the whole Number said to be lost, were drowned in the Ship, by the Waters flowing in upon them, they being in a weak, sickly Condition, and perishing that way, being unable to help themselves; and especially as it was one of the coldest Nights we have felt this Winter. One of these Letters says, That Two Thirds of the People were destroyed by the Wet and Cold, and most of their Treasure lost: And the other, That 50 of them were drowned between Decks. From these, and the various Reports relating to them, we can collect, That out of about 300

Souls that enter'd on board this Ship, there are not above 60 alive; and those in so low a Condition, that its much doubted, whether some of them will recover. Among this Number is a Daughter of Col. Brown's, (a Gentleman of Fortune, the Chief of this new Colony, who happened to take his Passage another Way, and arriv'd here about a Month ago;) this young Gentlewoman it seems was Speechless, and her Life in great Danger: Three other of his children who came in the Ship, are like to do well. This Gentleman was waiting at Hampton for their Arrival, and upon the News of their being at Anchor in Lynnhaven Bay, immediately procur'd a Vessel and Provisions, and went to their Relief; but to his unspeakable Grief, found them in this Distress. This Ship was reckon'd one of the richest, that has come to this Colony for many Years; and 'tis fear'd that much of her Treasure is lost. However, That is but a Trifle in Comparison to the Loss of so many Lives, and this Loss the Colony may sustain, by this Disasters discouraging some Thousands of the same Country People from Coming hither to settle our back Lands, (which are very rich, and capable of great Improvements) who it seems intended it; unless their Terror be in some Measure mitigated, by the kind, hospitable Treatment they met with in their Distresses.

As soon as the Gentlemen and other Inhabitants of Princess Anne, saw the deplorable Condition of the People, they immediately took them to their Houses, gave them all the Comfort and Sustenance they cou'd; and contributed as much as lay in their Power, to their Preservation. And our good Governor, upon receiving Advice of their Misfortune, forthwith sent Orders, That every thing shou'd be done for them, that was convenient and necessary for the Preservation of their Lives and Effects; which must undoubted be very grateful to those poor Souls, who have been so many months at Sea, have suffer'd so much Hardship by Famine, and at last (coming within Sight of their desir'd Port,) but very narrowly escaped the Jaws of Death. (From the Virginia Gazette, Number 128, Williamsburg, January 12, 1738) Since our last we have the following Particulars relating to the Switzers, That when the Ship came within the Capes, the Wind was so fair, that if they had kept under Sail, instead of anchoring at Lynnhaven-Bay, they might have been safe at Hampton in about 2 Hours; but the People being almost famish'd, having nothing to eat for several Days, insisted on the Captains coming to Anchor there, and going ashore to get Provisions. Accordingly the Captain and some of the Passengers went ashore, but it being an Island, and no House upon it, they walk'd about a long Time in vain; meantime the Wind rose, and blew violently at Nor west, stove their Boat ashore, parted the Ship from one Anchor, and the other dragg'd, so that she was drove so near ashore, as to strike on the Ground, whereby her Bottom was so injur'd, that she fill'd with Water in a very short Time, and between 40 and 50 were drowned between Decks; and had it not been for the Assistance of Two Ships that lay near them at Anchor, who put as many of the People ashore as they cou'd with Safety to themselves, they must most of them been drown'd: And after they were put ashore, receiving no Shelter, from the Inclemency of the Weather, about 70 of them were frozen to Death, some on the Beach, and others in the Marshes, as they were scattered about, in Search for Houses. Those who surviv'd, amounting to about 90, were taken Care of by the Gentlemen and other Inhabitants of that Neighbourhood, and they are all like to do well. Col. Browns Daughter is pretty well recovered, as are also his Three other Children. The Ship lies in a bad Condition at the same Place where she struck full of Water, so that they have got but little out of her yet; however, proper Methods are taking to get their Money, which is said to be very considerable, and Goods, out of her; and then they purpose to go to their intended Settlement (From the Virginia Gazette, Number 129, Williamsburg, January 19, 1738)

Upon the Information of Cap^t W^m Carver ag^t Jone the wife

¹Captain William Carver was made a justice for Lower Norfolk County, Virginia, October 15, 1663; was added to the Quorum February 15, 1665, and on the 25th of November, 1665, was suspended the commission by Sir William Berkeley, and on the 15th of October, 1667, was again added to the commission. Was High Sheriff in 1670, and after the expiration of the term of his office, again took his seat on the bench, and was present for the last time June 18, 1672. He was a member of the House of Burgesses in 1665, and June 15, 1669, and April 16, 1672, was appointed to take the tythables for the Southern branch of the Elizabeth River, and August 18, 1669, was appointed General Surveyor of Highways for the Western and Southern branches of Elizabeth River, and August 16, 1671, General Surveyor of Highways for the Southern branch precincts. On the 16th of April, 1664, he bought of Henry Goodricke "a ship called the Expedicon, of 40 tons, for 20,000 pounds of tobacco," and on June 15, 1666, he, designating himself William Carver, Mariner, and Elizabeth his wife, sold "to Edward Davis and Rachel his wife, their well-beloved cozens," 300 acres of land, part of a patent for 500 acres granted him July 4, 1664, "in the Southern branch of Elizabeth River," and on May 8, 1668, he, this time, calling himself William Carver, merchant, of the Southern branch of the Elizabeth River, gave John Low 50 acres of land "lying att the head of Church Creek."

On the 25th of July, 1672, while laboring under an aberration of the mind, he killed Thomas Gilbert, who was sitting next to him at dinner, by stabbing him with a knife. In his examination, August 15, 1672, he deposed "that as for his part hee knoweth nothing of It, noe more then the child that is now unborne, nor of any other action that day nor severall days beefore or after." Captain Carver sided with Bacon, during Bacon's Rebellion, and held an important position in his fleet. He was captured and put to death, and died with great courage. Governor Berkeley, in pursuance of his relentless policy wrote the following letter :

Coll Mason Maj^r Sayer and Cap^t Bray: My honored frends by This time I preSume you have heard of the death of that Monstrous Rebell Bacon Soe that now there is noe pretence left to the Rebells his assotiates butt an Absolute declaraon of open Rebellion w^{ch} I preSum^e very few will dare to professe. Soe that now I hope shortly the County will Returne to Its former quiett thought nott to the former plenty w^{ch} those villains have destroyed in most places, butt six or Seaven yeares by gods Blessing may Recover that also, what Ever It bee your merritts will for Ever bee lookt upon by mee and I hope the whole country: I desire that Carvers Estate may bee Secured to help to pay the Charge of your County, and if any one Shall presume to Conceale itt, hee Shall bee accompted to have Conspired with Carver and Soe his Estate bee likewise Subject to Confiscation

William Berkeley

Captain Carver was twice married. His first wife was named Elizabeth, his second Rose. By his first wife he was the father of a son, Richard, who, born about 1649, survived him, and on the eleventh of May, 1681, sold to George Newton 784 acres of land called Brinsons Quarter, and on the 7th of December, the same year, sold Major Anthony Lawson for 11,500 pounds of tobacco in cask a tract of land on the east side of the bay of Elizabeth River, containing 300 acres, and called Lamberts Point. In both of these deeds he mentioned himself as being the son and heir of Captain William Carver.

these last, I remember, bit at a hook which the sailors had thrown out to catch a dolphin, and carried it off with a bit of the line which he had cut in two with his teeth. Some days, afterwards they saw, as they were fishing again a shark playing about their lines, and apparently anxious but unable to swallow the bait. This surprised them not a little but determined to have him, they got a harpoon at last, and struck it into him, and soon had him in upon the deck. Here the strange conduct of the fish was explained, for they found to their great surprise, that he was the very fellow that had carried off the dolphin hook some days before, and which had some how or other got fastened in his mouth and actually sewed up a corner of it, so that he could not swallow another hook. These were our sports during the calm ; but by and by, we had a heavy gale, at least I thought so, which made me very sick, and frightened me out of my wits into the bargain. All this, however, was soon forgot in the joy which I felt in being safely landed some days after in Bridgetown, which I thought a very handsome place, and the country around it was beautiful to my eyes. And here, there was no end to the attentions I received from the kind inhabitants. For Mr. Maxwell was well known there, and my father had given him letters to all his old friends ; so that I received all sorts of attention from them. I stayed, however, chiefly at Mr. Applewhite's, a rich merchant who had formerly lived in Isle of Wight County, and coming down to Norfolk, had married Molly Archer, but sorely against her father's will, for Mr. Applewhite was then a poor man. But he had taken his wife to Bridgetown, and having prospered in business, was now rich, and up in the world and highly respected. Molly, too, had written a letter to her father at Norfolk, full of excuses and love, and, moreover, giving such a fine account of her present prosperity (accompanied by some presents of shaddocks and oranges &c.) that the old man was highly delighted, and in his rapture, actually christened a new vessel which he launched about the time, The Mollys¹ letter—to the great wonderment of all who were not in the secret of his joy. The couple were, of course, glad to see me, and I lived in their house as in my own house, for your father had taken sprikes to load, and left me in their care. I was, however, in great request and often invited out and about. Among the rest, Judge Pairchild, I remember, a very handsome gentleman, used to call every day to take me out to shew me all that was worth seeing about the place. I was charmed with the scenery so different from any that I had ever seen before, the large coconut trees, so tall like one of our highest pines, with a bunch of limbs at the top, and the beautiful orange trees. I drank tea more than once in a whole grove of them. All the finest fruits were common about the streets as ours apples and peaches with us. The hucksters in the streets had their tables loaded with them. They had particularly I recollect, young cocoa-nuts which were all just a jelly of milk, the sweetest things in the world—and the ladies would stop and eat them as they went along the streets. So I was enchanted with all I saw, and almost thought myself in Paradise. To crown the whole, a company of gentlemen and ladies, had got up a play which they were going to act for the benefit of the poor. The parts were all cast, and the dresses made, and Judge Pairchild had called to engage me to go with him, and I was full of girlish anticipation,—when lo! and behold! to spoil the sport, Mr. M. having loaded his vessel, came up and took me away from the fruits and flowers, and all the rest. They begged him, indeed, to put off his departure, at least, till after the play, but he had no notion of committing such a folly, and said his ship was loaded, and he could not stop a day for all the plays in the world. So, we left the charming island and all its pleasures, and returned to Norfolk again, when, you may be sure, I had enough to tell about all I had seen. By the way, however, I had been so sick and frightened again on the voyage back, that I told Mr. M. that I would never go another trip with him while I lived. “And, indeed, my dear,” said he laughing, after the specimen I have had of your seamanship, I promise you I shall never ask you to go along with me again. So we were agreed on this point. After this, we continued to live in Norfolk in a calm, domestic way, but very agreeably for some years. Mr. Maxwell indeed, still went to sea, to different places, owning several vessels in partnership with my father, and making money every voyage. After a while, too, my elder sister had got married to a Mr. Marsden,² a Scotch-

MY MOTHER.

In the meantime, when I had passed my twentieth year, I had my first child, a daughter which we called Sarah after my husband's aunt in London. About a year afterwards, I had another, a son, whom we called Maximilian, after my father. Then I had another daughter called Helen, after myself. So, we were going on, as usual, and enjoying much domestic happiness when the Revolutionary War came on to disturb our quiet and drive us from our peaceful home. And now, Lord Dunmore, the last royal Governor of the State, having quarrelled with the Legislature at Williamsburg took to his ship, the Fowey man of war lying at York, and shortly afterwards, came down to this place with a small fleet, and anchored in the harbour of the town. Many of the officers visited at our house. Among the rest I remember particularly, Mr. Lane, sailing master of Lord Dunmore's ship, and a Mr. Calder, I believe, of one of the vessels under him. The former, especially, was very intimate with us, and when we expressed the fear that our Lord would bombard the town, said to us . . . "There is no danger of it at present, but when it is decided on,

I shall know it of course, and will give you a hint in time." Accordingly a few days after, he told us it was time for us to be moving, and we set about sending all our valuable articles of furniture &c. over to Max Herbert's at the point, where we took a room which he kindly let us have, and to which, we at least retreated ourselves to get out of the way of the balls, leaving a negro woman, old Sarah behind to take care of the house and lot, and look after a sow and pigs which she was raising for herself with great care. Scarcely was this done, when we saw the ships all drawn up in a line before the town, from the upper wharf to town point and heard the drums beating on board of them and presently afterwards they began to fire away on the town¹ about four O'clock in the afternoon (Jan. 1st 1776). In the midst of the cannonade we saw a small boat rowed by a single man, with another person in it, put off from the Norfolk side, and make for the Point where we were looking on, and could not imagine what could be in it. The enemy soon saw her, too, and concluding, no doubt, that she carried the Mayor, or some other personage of equal consequence, who was trying to make his escape, they despatched a barge well manned after her, and soon took her and carried her to one of the ships. And who were the fugitives? Old Sarah and her sow and pigs. For it seems, being alarmed by the great guns, and trembling for the safety of her darlings, whom she loved as if they had been her own children, she abandoned the care of the property, and was trying to save her bacon in this way. Now, when the British Captain saw what a mistake he had made, and learned moreover, that she belonged to Mr. Maxwell he ordered the man in the barge to take the prise over to him at the Point. Here Mr. and Mrs. Herbert, and his sons, seeing the boat coming, and apprehending an attack on the house, armed themselves with their guns and went down to the landing to keep the barge off. This was enough for me. I instantly caught up my daughter Helen in my arms, and taking little Max by the hand, I set off to make my escape with them to another Mr. Herbert's who lived some miles off, and where, I thought, I should be more safe. By this time night was coming on, and the roar of the cannon was more and more dreadful in my ears. When I got to the great gate, I met a negro man named Jack belonging to the family, coming home. "Oh, mistress," said he, "where are you going? Indeed Jack, said I, I can hardly tell you, but I believe I am going to Mr. . . . Herbert's Though I do not know a step of the way. Why, mistress, said he, Mr. . . . Herbert lives at least 8 miles off, and I am sure you can never get there this night. But there is a Mrs. Herbert who lives about two miles from here, up the river, and if you will wait a little till I can just go to the house and carry my bag, I will show you the way there, for you will never find it without. Agreed said I, and presently Jack was gone and come, and taking up Nelly in his arms we set off to trudge our way through the wood and marsh, to Mrs. Herbert's. We had not proceeded far, however, when we were met by my mother in a chaise, with my brother Jonathan driving her. She knew my voice and cried out, Oh, Nelly, is that you? So I told her what had happened and where I was going. Just then who should come up to us but Mrs. Herbert herself, who was flying from her house in the greatest alarm, saying that she had heard that the British were going to set fire that night to all the houses along the river, and she was flying to her brother's for safety. Of course we were now at a great loss to know what to do, but just then Mr. M. came up having succeeded in making peace with the barge men and the Herberts, and immediately set out after me. He assured Mrs. Herbert that the British would have enough to do that night with the town, and persuaded her to go back to her house, put down beds on the floor, and take us all in till next morning, when he would come up and carry me off to Kempsville. Accordingly, the next morning, he came with a fine barge, which he had borrowed from one of the ships and took me bag and baggage up the Branch to Kempsville. I took up my lodging in a room in Billy White's house, one of the largest and best in the village, where my sister Marsden was staying, or came soon after, I forget which, and where, I made sure that I would be safe.

1. To the Editor of the Nation:

SIR: If we are to believe the school histories of the day, if we are to believe Bancroft and Fiske, the British under Lord Dunmore early in the Revolutionary War, burned the city of Norfolk to the ground; and yet, as a matter of fact, the destruction of that prosperous town was accomplished by the Continental forces themselves, and partly by the direct orders of the Convention of the State of Virginia. Bancroft, in his eighth volume, describes in his most graphic manner the destruction of the city, and concludes by saying that the American commanders, Howe and Woodford, certainly made every effort to arrest the flames, and argues that troops without tents would hardly in midwinter have burned down the houses that were their only shelter. He goes on to say that "When Washington learned the fate of the rich emporium of his own 'Country,' for so he called Virginia, his breast heaved with waves of anger and grief: 'I hope,' said he, 'this and the threatened devastation of other places will unite the whole Country in one indissoluble band against a nation which seems lost to every sense of virtue.'" Fiske treats of the incident briefly, and in no wise mentions the fact that the Continentals had any part or portion in the destruction of the town, but assumes that the whole conflagration was the result of the British bombardment. Though it does not seem to be generally known, the whole question of the destruction of Norfolk was investigated in the year 1777 by Commissioners appointed by the General Assembly. Their report was made October 10, 1777, and I suppose is still on file in the Auditor's Department. At any rate, it was a matter of discussion in the House of Delegates in 1835-36, and was published with the proceedings of that year. This report is accompanied by a schedule of all the property destroyed—time when, by whom, and value—and also by the depositions establishing the facts. It establishes that out of 1,333 houses burned, only 54 were destroyed by Lord Dunmore, and that on January 1, when the historians state that he burned the whole town, he burned only 19 houses—32 having been burned by him November 30, 1775, and three January 21, 1776. It establishes that 863 houses were burned by the troops of the State before January 15, 1776, and that 416 houses were destroyed by order of the Convention in February. It goes on to say: "Upon an inspection of the schedule and the depositions which have been taken, it will appear that very few of the houses were destroyed by the enemy, either from their cannonade or by the parties they landed on the wharves; indeed, the efforts of these latter were so feeble that we are induced to believe most of the houses which they did set fire to might have been saved had a disposition of that kind prevailed among the soldiery, but they appear to have had no such intentions, on the contrary, they wantonly set fire to the greater part of the houses within the town, where the enemy never attempted to approach, and where it would have been impossible for them to have penetrated." I find this corroborated by an extract from the Virginia Gazette, published on board the ship Dunmore, lying off Norfolk, dated Jan. 15, 1776, which is to be found in American Archives, 4th series (Vol. IV, page 542): "As the wind was moderate, and from the shore, it was judged with Certainty that the destruction would end with that part of the town next the water, which the Kings ships meant only should be fired: but the Rebels cruelly & unnecessarily Completed the destruction of the whole town by setting fire to the houses in the streets back, which were before safe from the flames." The only explanation that I have seen of the action of the State troops in this matter is worthy of Sir Boyle Roche. It was that they had burned the whole town in order that they might be better able to defend the remainder.

Yours truly, WM. HENRY SARGEANT,
Public Library, Norfolk, Va., January 23, 1897.

brought a miscellaneous company of good, bad and indifferent people. The good were in the minority; but they possessed the strength of their convictions, and were able, by their skill in government, to hold in check the turbulent elements with which they were accidentally associated. Of these immigrants Mr. Palfrey, in his “History of New England,” says: Eleven are favorably known. The rest are either known unfavorably or else only by name.—From the Old Colony Town, page 27, by William Root Bliss.

notar." "In 1564, Robert Scott of Thulstane, ancestor of Lord Napier, could not sign his name," and three years later the marriage contract of Walter Scott of Harden was signed by a notary, because none of the parties were able to write their names. From 1551 to 1571, John Shakespeare, the poet's father, held several public positions under the town government of Stratford, and he, as did most of the members of the corporation, made his mark, and only seven persons of ninety, who signed some orders for Brighton in 1580, wrote their names, and less than one-half of the subscribers to a loyal petition from Bridgewater, in 1680, were able to write their names, and the English country gentleman of 1685 was barely able to write his name. In 1827 fifty-eight per cent of the young men intended for the French military service could neither read nor write, and in 1841-45 more than thirty-two per cent of the men in England and Wales who were married during that time, signed the marriage registers with marks, and in 1866, in Italy, fifty-nine per cent of the men who were married that year made their marks. Fourteen of thirty-five of the early settlers of Exeter, New Hampshire, July 4th, 1639, made their marks. In the compact made by the original settlers of Providence, Rhode Island, four of the thirteen signers made their marks. Nearly all of the early residents of Gravesend, New York, made their marks, "very few of the English settlers being able to write." "Many of the early gentry of Maryland could not write their names," and one, if not more, of the earliest judges of the provincial court made his mark. The early Swedish settlers of Pennsylvania were very ignorant, and but few of them could write their names, and two members of the Colonial Council of Pennsylvania for 1681 made their marks. Miles Morgan a selectman of Springfield, Massachusetts, during the latter part of the seventeenth century made his mark. Five of the twenty-three members of Captain Lawrence's company, Groton, Massachusetts, 1758, made their marks. The founders of several influential families in Southeast Virginia were unable to write their names, and one of them was a churchwarden.

¹Judith Shakespeare, the poet's youngest daughter, could not write her name, and "in the early part of the eighteenth century many of the ladies of the highest rank in Scotland could not write, and some of them could not even read." In New England, from 1690-1713, the daughters of men of high official position were often compelled to

NORFOLK THEATRES OF THE OLDEN TIME.²

A writer in the Norfolk Herald, June 19, 1839, on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone of the Avon Theatre that stood where the police station now is, says: An octogenarian friend gives the reminiscences of the theatricals of the borough in his juvenile days. The theatre was quite well patronized before the Revolution. The theatre building then was a wooden structure that had originally been built for a pottery. It stood in the rear of a lot on the south side of Main street, somewhere about King's lane, on the river margin. There was no regular theatre until 1793, when a large wooden warehouse on Calvert's lane, in the rear of Hotel Norfolk now stands, was used. In 1795 a large new brick theatre was built on the east side of Fenchurch street, between Main and Bermuda streets, and was used as such until 1833, when it was sold to Dr. John French for the Methodist Protestant Church. It was burned some time about 1846 or later. It was in this latter theatre Booth made his appearance after his arrival in Norfolk from Madeira in 1825. THOMAS B. ROWLAND.

The Pictorial History of England, by Craik and Macfarlane. "Of the women," says Martin in his "Evolution of the Public Schools of Massachusetts," "whose names appear in the recorded deeds of the early part of the eighteenth century, more than sixty per cent made their mark." From "The Schools and Schoolmasters of Colonial Days in Medford" in "the Medford Historical Register" for January, 1898, Medford, Massachusetts, by Benj. F. Morrison. As late as 1785 the town of Northampton, Massachusetts, voted "not to be at any expense for schooling girls." The town, however, in 1792, after a protracted struggle, "voted to admit girls to the town schools from May to October; but those only who were between the ages of 8 and 15 years." From "Side Glimpses from the Colonial Meeting House" by William Root Bliss. In Plymouth, Massachusetts, in 1793, "A project to establish a school for girls was opposed because it might teach wives how to correct their husband's errors in spelling." Mr. Davis in his "Ancient Landmarks of Plymouth," quoted by W. Root Bliss in his "Old Colony Town." Ignorance was not confined to any one section, but was pretty well distributed.

This abstract from the will of Abraham Halstead of Rotterdam, merchant, made April 5, 1651, proved May 2, 1651, may throw light on the history of the Moseley family. Yardley was the 2nd son of Sir George Yardley, Knt, and Lady Temperance his wife. He married the widow of Capt. John Gookin, who married the widow of Capt. Adam Thoroughgood. J. Henry Lea, Esq., of Cedarhurst, Fairhaven, Mass., in note 35, p. 71, in his "Certificates of Head Rights in the County Court of Lower Norfolk, Virginia," in the New England Historical and Genealogical Register for January, 1893, thinks it probable that W^m Moseley was a goldsmith. The evidence does not bear out this supposition. Mrs. M., had her husband have been a dealer in jewelry, would hardly have felt an interest in the purchaser. It would to her have been a matter of indifference as to who wore the jewels. Her concern shows that they were her personal ornaments.

¹ The marriages for 1804 credited to Rev. James Dawley on pages 78 and 79 were undoubtedly performed by the Rev. W^m Dawley. It is not so stated in the marriage book, but the language shows it beyond a doubt, and they were credited to the Rev. James Dawley by an oversight.

MY MOTHER.

Soon afterwards, however, Lord Dunmore took it into his head to make an excursion into the country, at the head of his troops, consisting of a fine body of grenadiers, and a large company of refugees, and carried all before him. A number of the militia, indeed, from Norfolk and all about commanded by Col. ——— (the son of the old Col.) had been drawn up in a field before Kempsville to stop his march, but when they saw the British coming, with colors flying, arms shining, and drums beating, they all took to their heels and ran away as fast as their horses and legs could carry them, without staying to fire a single shot. I saw them myself racing off at a fine rate through Kempsville and Matthews among them, whipping up his horse and crying out as loud as he could bawl take care of the powder, take care of the powder. The Colonel, however, being full of Dutch courage, staid behind and not being in a condition to keep up with him, fell into the hands of the enemy, and I heard some of the British officers laugh and say, that they had taken him lying flat on his back in the field, and crying out, We'll die in the bed of honor though, they added that he was already dead—drunk, at least. After this Lord Dunmore entered the town¹ in triumph, at the head of his soldiers and proceeded at once to establish his headquarters at Mrs. Logans.² Here, he erected his Majestys standard and those who could not conveniently run away, went at once and took the oath of allegiance. Some of the poor Pungo³ people, too, who had particularly distinguished themselves in the flight of the militia becoming alarmed lest they should be pursued and overtaken, turned back in their flight and came to town to submit themselves to the Conquerors. All who thus declared themselves on the King's side, wore a badge of red cloth on their breasts, and the price of the article rose in the stores. Some wore a flanning patch as large as your hand but others were content with a smaller piece. Never, I suppose since wars began, was there a victory more complete or won with so little loss of blood. Seeing the town thus taken and alarmed again for our safety, my sister Marsden and myself, went over in the afternoon to Charles Sawyers,¹ who lived a little out of Kenpsville, to stay with his family as he had kindly invited us to do. We had hardly got there however, when an ugly looking negro man, dressed up in a full suit of British regimentals, and armed with a gun, came in upon us, and asked with a saucy tone—Have you got any dirty shirts here? (this is the name by which our soldiers were known) I want your dirty shirts. No said I, we have no dirty shirts here. But you have, said he, and I will find them. He went up stairs to look for them, as he said, but no doubt to see what he could steal. Presently he came in again, and said, I am going away now, but I shall be back again by and by. So saying he went off. You see now, said I, to my sister, this is no place of safety for us, and, I think we had better go back to the town before that horrid wretch returns, as he has threatened to do. I then went to my trunk and took out a purse of gold, and filled my pockets with dollars, and we set off. It was now dark, and as we entered the town, we found the houses all lighted up, and Mrs. Logans particularly appeared almost illuminated. Knowing that I had a friend at Court in her, the thought struck me that I would go over, at once, to her house to see Lord Dunmore, and complain to him, of the insult I had just received. Mrs. Logan received me with great kindness, and introduced me to Lord Dunmore, who was sitting at his ease, and apparently highly pleased with his days work. So I told him my tale. Why, madam, said he, this is a provoking piece of insolence indeed, but there is no keeping these black rascals within bounds. It was but the other day that one of them undertook to personate Capt. Squires, and actually extorted a sum of money from a lady in his name. But we much expect such things whilst this horrid rebellion lasts. Yet he had excited the negroes himself. (See the history.) But, pray madam, continued he, where is your husband all this time? Indeed, my Lord, said I, I cannot tell you where he is. For he left me this morning, and I do not know where he has gone. But you will see him soon? said he. I cannot say when I shall see him. Well, madam, when you do, you must be sure and tell him for me, that this is no time for a man like him to be out of the way. His Majesty wants his service, and I will give him any place he will name, if he will come in and join us. But join us he must. Shortly afterwards I rose to go home, when his Lordship followed me to the door, and offering me his arm, insisted on seeing me safe to my lodgings. I tried to decline the honor, especially, as I thought there was some risk, saying, O! dont trouble yourself, my Lord, It is but a step—and, besides, I am afraid there is danger by the way, as some of our men may be lurking about and watching for a chance to shoot you,—though the truth is, I was only afraid that they might miss their mark and shoot me. Oh! as to that, Madam, never fear—my sentries are all about, and I cant be caught napping. So I took his arm, and he escorted me very politely to Billy Whites door, where he bade me good night, but not till he had charged me again to be sure and tell Mr. Maxwell that he was very anxious to see him. When I entered the house, I found it filled with refugees, some of whom knew me and was disposed to be very polite. They had a rousing fire below, and were very merry. My sister, however, had a room up stairs, and I another opposite to it, and we both went up and retired to our chambers. Soon, afterwards, a servant girl came in to say that there was some one at the bottom of the garden, wanting to see me, and, she added, he says you must come to him directly. And, who is it? said I. Why he told me not tell any one said she, but, he says he is your husband. So, I followed the girl, and there I found Mr. Maxwell. I told him, of course, all the occurrences of the day. Well, said he, I see that I must still keep out of the way, for I am determined not to join Lord Dunmore in any event. Well, said I, but at least, you can be safe here to night, and you can come in privately and spend it with me, and tomorrow you may be off again. Well, said he, I believe I will take your advice. So we went in together, and shortly afterwards retired to rest. Not long afterwards, however, I saw by the light of the moon shining into the room, two tall grenadiers, armed cap-a-pee, come in and make directly for the bed where he lay. In an instant Mr. Maxwell was up, and demanded, What do you want? Hush! said one of the men, Hush or you are a dead man. Still Mr. Maxwell persisted What do you want, I say? Leave the room this instant, or, your officers are below, and I will call them up. At this the fellow made a pass at him with his bayonet, which went through his shirt and even grazed his breast, and, turning then, they made for the door, and ran down stairs, and Mr. Maxwell after them. At this, I rose also, for I thought they had gone into my sister's room, and drawing on my gown, followed the chase, making but one step from the top to the bottom of the stairs. Here, I found my sister and several of the refugees with lights crying, whats the matter? and Mr. M. pointing to a hoisted window and saying I saw the rascals go out of that window. But, I know them, and will have them punished for this outrage in the morning. So, we all returned to our apartments again. The next morning Mr. M. left me again, and I saw no more of him for several days. At last, I saw him come in the house, with a bit of red cloth on the breast of his coat. Oh! said I, is it come to this? Believe me, I would rather have seen you dead than to have seen you with this red badge. Phast! said he, do you think it has changed my mind? Don't you see how Dunmore is carrying all before him, and, if I can save my property by this step, ought I not in common prudence to wear it, for your sake and the children? But I tell you again you may be perfectly sure that I shall never join the enemy. Shortly afterwards, he told me that Billy White and Charles Sawyer were going to take their families out into North Carolina, and, if you choose, said he, I will join them and take you out too. Oh, well said I, any where so you take me where I cannot hear those great guns. So, he went and hired lodgings for me in the house of one Squire Evrigan in Pasquotank county in N. C. and, some time afterwards, I removed there. In the mean time, Lord Dunmore, elated by his easy victory over the Norfolk and Pungo militia, determined to attack our troops at the Great Bridge,¹ where we had about a thousand men who had been sent down under the command of Col. Woodford, and who were strongly posted behind a breastwork which they had thrown up at the further end of the long causeway which led into the village from the Norfolk side. It was, indeed, a foolhardy undertaking, but, he thought that his grenadiers were invincible. So, he ordered Capt. Fordyce to lead them on to the attack. Capt. F. saw at once the folly and rashness of the order, but was too brave a man and too good a soldier to flinch from any duty. He was very intimate with Mr. Maxwell and had been at our house in Norfolk. He was not handsome, but very genteel, and I remember seeing him one day turn over Mr. M's Music, of which he was very fond, and humming some of the tunes. It was said that he gave his watch to his friend, with a message for his wife, for he knew, as he said, that he was going to his death. It was reported, too, that Col. Woodford, to deceive the British, had sent a negro boy into their camp, who told them that our men were out of amunition, had no powder, and had been obliged to melt up their shoe buckles for shot. This story, perhaps, duped Lord Dunmore and made him more confident of success. At length the morning came when the gallant Fordyce led on his men to the assault, but our people opened a deadly fire upon them with their rifles and shot them down like sheep. Fordyce himself was killed among the first, having received no less than 17 or 18 balls in different parts of his body. The first was in his knee, but he tied a handkerchief round it, and marched on cheering his men. There was a song made upon it: Come my brave boys, the day is our own. But I forget it now. There were a number killed and many wounded, whom they brought back to Norfolk in wagons and carts. I remember I had gone down that day to see my mother at Mr. Herberts, where she was still staying, and towards evening we saw them coming with the poor creatures in them, crying water, water,—and, I and the young women, moved with pity went out and carried them pitchers of water, which they drank with a rabid thirst which it seemed impossible to satisfy. Shortly afterwards, my husband came in and took me out, to my lodgings which he had taken for me in Pasquotank. Here I had Polly. Here we were quiet, and I liked our situation so well, that Mr. M. had thought of buying a farm there and settling us down on it, when he received a letter from Gen. Washington, I think, or some one—inviting him to come and take charge of the Navy Yard which it was proposed to establish, and he determined, at once, to accept the invitation and join the standard of the country, which, I was both proud and pleased to have him do. We then came down and went to stay for a short time at the house on the farm on Tanners Creek, which belonged to my father. Thence, we went up to the Ship Yard on the Chickahominy river.
